“ Larry was my Uncle, but since I grew up with him he was more my brother. We had been estranged for 18 years and he found me around a year & 1/2 ago. We had fixed whatever it was and had built our relationship back. He called or text every day or the next. When we started talking it was like we hadn't missed a beat, we would talk for hours catching up with what life had thrown at us. I hate that I got so busy during the summer with my kids being out of school, maybe I would have seen how sick he was. I had gotten use to him being gone but now I was use to him being around!!! Now I am missing him all over again! I miss him so much! I just have to say he came to believe in Jesus as his Lord and savior and had asked him into his , I did a lot of talking and he'd say "I'm almost to your side"  well he finally came over! So I'm excited I will see him again!
Larry, I've been listening to a lot of Pink Floyd and AC/DC in temperance of you! Love Punkin Delaine

“ I met Larry back in the early 80's at a Bar called the Living Room. He was always a sweet but quiet man. Hadn't seen him n many years until this last year and reconnected with him. He was still the same sweet but quiet man. I knew he had suffered after his wife died and never was happy again. Still this is a sad ending for such a nice guy. Rest in Heavenly peace Larry, you will be missed.
